JUST TWO HOURS TO SECURE
DIVORCE

A romance commenced in the lower end hills of Portola twenty years ago was shattered when Judge Franklin Griffin on Tuesday last in San Francisco granted Mrs. Edith P. Brown a divorce from her husband, Willard N. Brown, on the ground of desertion. Mrs. Brown was formerly Miss Edith Preston and spent her girlhood at the palatial home of her father, the late E. F. Preston, who was at one time a candidate for governor of California. Miss Preston was in her young years accounted one of the prettiest girls in California.

It took Mrs. Brown less than two hours to file her complaint, give her testimony and obtain her decree of divorce from the court. The couple was married in San Francisco April 9, 1901, and separated January 5, 1921. The wife waived her rights to the custody of their children—a daughter aged 18 and a son, 17.

RETAILERS TO TALK
OVER IMPORTANT MATTERS

An invitation is hereby extended to all parties in Redwood City engaged in the retail business to meet in the rooms of the Sequoia Club at 7:30 p. m. Many startling disclosures concerning the retail business and its friends, together with other important matters are up for discussion and it is urged that every retailer be present. An open statement to the public will be issued regarding the fallacy of buying stock in visionary schemes that tend only to disrupt the established order of legitimate business dealings. Monday night at Sequoia Club rooms at 7:30.

DONALD DOYLE BADLY HURT

Donald Doyle, the 12-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Doyle, 413 Walnut street, was thrown from his bicycle on Middlefield road by a heavy touring car and run over last Sunday afternoon and severely injured. He was removed to the Quinceviers Hospital, where medical aid was summoned. It was found that he had suffered a fractured skull and his right arm was broken in two places. Afterward the boy was removed to the Mills Memorial Hospital at San Mateo. Late accounts from the institution are to the effect that he will recover. At first it was thought by the attending physicians that his injuries were fatal. The lad is very well liked by all who know him and the fact that he is recovering is a source of happiness to his many friends.

Of course you "can't believe all you hear," but most people do.

Crystal Springs, Past and Present

W. B. Lawrence, Superintendent Water Division, in "San Francisco Water," January, 1922.

"Riding southward down the valley of San Andreas in the cool, quiet evening, we came to the Crystal Springs, one of the most beautiful summer resorts in the vicinity of San Francisco. There is a fine, large hotel, with a broad piazza all around it, just the place to sit and smoke a good cigar, have a quiet talk with your friends, and admire the beauty of the surrounding scenery, brought out in all its loveliness by the full autumn moon which was pouring down its full flood of mellow light upon the scene. The San Mateo creek runs through a wild, tangled thicket in front of the house; parterres of flowers of every hue, in full bloom, fill the intervening grounds; and on the west the steep mountain sweeps around in a grand curve, forming a magnificent amphitheatre beside which the Coliseum is but the toy playhouse of a child."

This flowery description of the region which is now submerged beneath the impounded waters of the Crystal Springs Lake of the Spring Valley Water Company, was written by Col. Albert S. Evans of San Francisco and is to be found in his "A La California," a book now quite rare, published in 1873.

A Great Sight
It requires a distinct effort of imagination nowadays for one who stands on the causeway of the great Crystal Springs dam to visualize the busy hotel and the farms which were all swept away from that smiling vale before it was converted into a lake. Crystal Springs Lake is situated about 4 1/2 miles west of the city of San Mateo, occupying part of the San Andreas, Crystal Springs and Canada de Raymundo valleys. The water is impounded by the Crystal Springs dam, a concrete structure 145 feet wide at the base, 145 feet high and 600 feet long.

The exploration operations at the damsite were started in 1886, the first concrete placed in 1887 and the dam was completed to its present height in 1891, construction going on only during the summer season.

Before Crystal Springs became a Spring Valley Lake its gayeties attracted visitors from all parts of the peninsula.

This parcel occupied a strategic position at the outlet of the valley, a fact which Colonel Evans adumbrated in his flowery description already quoted. Its easterly boundary is just west of the present Crystal Springs concrete dam and within its limits is the confluence of San Mateo creek and its branches. Other important and strategic points were bought and the upper Crystal Springs reservoir was commenced in 1875. This was completed in 1877 by the con-

The Crystal Springs reservoir thus formed has a catchment area of 22 1/2 square miles, from which it receives its water supply. The lake is practically 9 miles long, one mile wide at its widest and about 140 feet deep in the deepest part. It has a surface area of 1,483 acres and a capacity of 21,622 million gallons, and submerges portions of the Canada de Raymundo Rancho, Rancho de las Pulgas, Felis Rancho and the San Mateo Rancho—these being the names of the early Spanish grants.

At the time of the acquisition of the lands by the Spring Valley Water Company for the purpose of forming the Crystal Springs lake the holding owners of portions of these various ranches were Margaret O'Callahan, J. R. Spring, Adolph C. Weber, Romeo Mauvais, Isaac Friedlander, Edwin A. Rowe, John and Rebecca Spaulding, Gustave Touchard, Samuel L. Theller and wife, Alexander Caselli, G. F. Maynard, Michael Doan, Luis A. Arguello, S. O. de Arguello, Soledad de Arguello, James Byrnes, S. M. Mezes, W. H. Howard, the excellent trout fishing. There was also good quail trapping, but this was not a sport—the live birds were sold to the Crystal Springs Hotel for $2.50 a dozen. The fashionable guests from San Francisco whose smart equipages thronged the hotel grounds every Sunday always demanded quail on toast with their vintage champagne.

Farther down the road was San Felix station, another baiting place for the daily stage. Domingo Feliz, proprietor of the rancho, gave this station its name. Earliest among the so-called "foreign settlers" were Bolinger, Maynard, Condon, and Wolf M. Casey came in 1857. About the same time James Byrnes began trading at the place (another stage station) then and still known as Byrnes Store, doing a very considerable business.

All of these activities ceased when the needs of San Francisco made the full development of these excellent water resources imperative. Hotel, farms, fields, dairies, everything had to go. Even the county road had to be relocated on higher ground. In the end the entire 35 square miles of catchment were swept clean of all human habitation. Today this is regarded as the most highly developed catchment area in the country.

If Mine Host Kenny of the Crystal Springs Hotel could come back to the once familiar spot he would seek a long time before he identified the site of the hotel where he used to accommodate "invalids, families, and visitors." And doubtless he would gaze at the wide expanse of water in the same astonishment which Balboa is supposed to have exhibited when he stumbled on the Pacific Ocean.

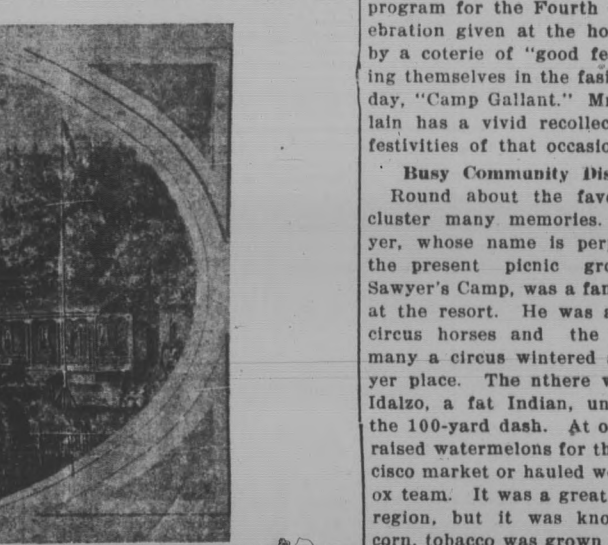

An Old Advertisement
Crystal Springs Hotel was built in the latter sixties. The following advertisement was published in the San Mateo Gazette (now the Redwood City Times-Gazette), June 5, 1869: "Crystal Springs Hotel—This favorite place of summer resort situated about four miles from the San Mateo depot of the San Francisco & San Mateo Railroad, is now open for the accommodation of invalids, families and visitors. A new and commodious building has just been completed and newly furnished; of 40 first-class accommodations to patrons of the hotel. The hotel is situated at the base of the Sierra Marina mountains in a dense forest of live

Hotel Property Bought
In the course of the time the company came to the development of Crystal Springs and in 1874 purchased for $37,500 the identical Crystal Springs Hotel tract of 95 acres which it had leased in 1860 and which it could have bought at that time for $9,000.

stuction of an earthen dam. Ten years later the lower reservoir was commenced and was finished in 1891 by the construction of the big concrete dam.

The postponement in 1860 of the development of the Crystal Springs system left this beautiful valley for a number of years to thrifty farmers, who cultivated every available acre; left undisturbed the Crystal Springs Hotel, described by Colonel Evans as "one of the most beautiful summer resorts in the vicinity of San Francisco;" and left also the scenic road in the valley over which ran the Concord stages of Taft, Garrettson & Co. (San Mateo, Pescadero & Santa Cruz Stage Company), carrying passengers and the mails from San Mateo past the stations of Crystal Springs Hotel, San Felix and the Byrnes store toward Halfmoon Bay and down the coast to Pescadero and Santa Cruz. The stages ran daily to Pescadero and three times a week to Santa Cruz.

No records are available now from James D. Walker, Christian Bollinger, San Mateo Water Works, R. and E. N. Sherwood, Mary Jane Starr, J. Claffo, Ellen Carey, Mary Craig, Agnes Bowie, M. Casey, John Donald, J. A. Drinkhouse, J. Quinn, Julia Morrison and Peyton.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1921.

THE NEWBERRY CASE

The Los Angeles Record of January 13 has a lengthy article in which both Senator Johnson and Senator Samuel M. Shortridge are severely criticised for their attitude on the Newberry election contest. Johnson is flayed because he was not at Washington at the time the vote to seat Newberry was taken. Mr. Shortridge is condemned because he was present and manfully voted to seat the Michigan senator.

Neither California senator need have any alarm about such gush from the southern journal.

Mr. Johnson is too well known and too much admired to have his reputation besmirched by such an article. The senator is loved and admired by the people of California and as a proof of their devotion and loyalty to him no candidate is to oppose him at the election next fall. No greater confidence could be placed in any public servant.

Mr. Shortridge was justified in voting with the other 46 senators in seating Senator Newberry. Henry Ford is responsible for all the trouble brought to Mr. Newberry, who was his opponent for the toga three years ago. After his defeat Ford left nothing undone to hamper his successful rival at the polls. A paid lobby was sent to Washington accompanied by lawyers to bring a contest to unseat Newberry. The election contest was taken the supreme court, where it was decided in favor of the senator.

Ford brought the charges that $300,000 was spent by Newberry in the election. What of it? What senator is elected without the expenditure of large sums of money? How much did James D. Phelan expend in trying to be re-elected last year? Mr. Shortridge is a poor man and had no money to lay out in the campaign. It is true his friends spent various sums in legitimate ways, the newspapers gave him very hearty support and he was elected notwithstanding he was handicapped by the big sack that was against him. No one found any fault with Mr. Phelan in spending his money. He was perfectly justified in doing so, if such expenditures were legitimately made.

Every senator who voted to seat Mr. Newberry may be commended for so doing. He was elected by the people of Michigan and should have been seated without a contest. Mr. Shortridge's friends in California applauded his action in voting with the majority.

OH, HOW BLIND!

As will be observed by a short note elsewhere in this issue, a real estate from Los Angeles sees a good chance to pick up plenty of cash in this part of California by grabbing subdivisions and selling them out in small chunks to people who want to live hereabouts. Are the owners of these same tracts—and others just as good—really so blind that they will permit an outsider to come in and pick up gold right under the eyes of the owners? It would appear to be that way from the viewpoint of a disinterested outsider.

It isn't necessary to enter upon a discussion of advantages of this particular locality. They are so manifest that anyone can recognize them without any aid. What really seems to be needed is a co-operative selling campaign. Many owners have a bit too much property to handle in an agricultural way at a profit. As it is they go on year after year paying taxes, waiting for the time to arrive when they can sell advantageously. They will never have better opportunities than are in sight. The present cold winter in the east and middle west will turn thousands this way for permanent homes. But that is a long way off.

There is a good demand right here among the city dwellers for just such homesites as can be had hereabouts. But they can't come to look at them unless attention is called to advantages offered, unless effort be made to interest them.

Back east there used to be a dapper fish peddler who had a powerful yell. His shout of "Fresh fish! Fresh fish!" roused the neighborhood on his route. One disgruntled householder ventured to remonstrate against the noise.

"Why must you yell so loud? You make enough noise to be heard a block away."

"Say, boss, the darkey in the confidential tone, 'dat's jes' what I see hollerin' for."

So it is here. Somebody must holler. Are the owners willing to do a little hollering themselves and in return get a handsome profit, or are they going to allow outsiders to get splendid lands at a low price, then by judicious hollering close it all out at a handsome profit? If the owners don't care, no one else will weep when the cream of the business goes to the fellow with the hollering ability. It's about time, however, for the resident land owners to get to the front. The city people are paying high rents for cramped quarters will be only too glad to heed the call of the open if they get a chance to hear it.

FORD ON BONDS

In a recent interview Henry Ford declared that his bank balance was in the neighborhood of $140,000,000 and that his assets could be capitalized and sold for a billion dollars. He had previously given out the information that his income and excess profits tax last year was $76,000,000. Concluding his recent statement he said, "All the money that comes to me goes into new industries. I never invest money in bonds or anything of the kind."

In view of some public comments Mr. Ford had previously made on the subject of the rights of bondholders it may be worth while to take more than a passing glance at the above quoted remarks. Mr. Ford is by native talent and training a man of mechanical skill and of rare ability in the organizing of productive industry. He not only knows how a piece of machinery should be constructed in order to get the best results out of the least material, but how to produce that machinery at the lowest cost. He also knows how to put that machine on the market to the best advantage. He not only has capital but he has the ability to use that capital better than any one else could use it for him.

But Mr. Ford makes a grievous mistake when he assumes that others should or can do as he has done. There is many a man of mechanical skill who can conceive a new idea in machinery but who has not the business ability to get together enough capital to finance production. There are also men of earning power as wage earners who have no business ability which would enable them to make by themselves profitable use of their savings. Our present complex industrial organization is made up very largely by bringing together the men of skill in production and the men of accumulated savings.

The man with five or ten thousand dollars of savings to invest cannot go into the business of producing automobiles, sewing machines or typewriters or phonographs; but if a sufficient number of these small capitalists put their money together under the management of some man skilled in production they can put into practical operation an industrial enterprise which will not only earn a profit for the manager, but a profit for these numerous small capitalists whose savings are thus employed. Without this combination of the capital of one class of people and the skill of another, both capital and skill would remain idle. These capitalists must, of course, have some evidence of their interest in the business and that evidence is represented by stocks or bonds.

Because he has capital enough of his own to be the sole owner of his establishment and to have no bonded indebtedness, Mr. Ford recently declared that bonds were a commercial evil and should be thrown away. Under that theory of business organization the saver of small amounts money would be denied the opportunity to use that capital in useful production. Moreover, under Mr. Ford's theory, the man who has skill in production but no capital would also be denied the opportunity to become a useful producer on an extensive scale.

In his latest declaration regarding his investments Mr. Ford has given what is practically a repudiation of his earlier statements.

SAN MATEO'S OPPORTUNITY

San Francisco and Oakland have reached a deadlock on the San Francisco-Oakland bridge project, the east bay section refusing to aid in the great improvement undertaking if it is to mean a removal of railroad terminals to San Francisco. Oakland's action will not mean ultimate defeat of the bridging of the bay in that region, however. The need for spanning the waterway between those two cities is too fully realized and its value and convenience to both San Francisco and the east bay cities, to say nothing of the interior districts, is too vast to justify abandonment of the enterprise. Oakland's accession from the movement will delay but not defeat the project.

The Dumbarton bridge proposal, which calls for spanning the bay between Alameda county and Dumbarton Point, being relatively simpler and less expensive than the San Francisco to Oakland bridge, was destined from the start to be constructed first. The threatened delay in the San Francisco-Oakland project will enable San Francisco to turn a fuller measure of her attention to the Dumbarton plan right away and thus more than ever speed its realization.

It is to be hoped that the people of San Mateo county who are to have the deciding voice in the Dumbarton project when that county calls a bond election to authorize the expenditure of $700,000 as San Mateo's portion of the $2,100,000 construction cost, will avoid any squabbling over non-essentials and take every advantage of the situation which is now so favorable to a successful realization of their hope.

San Mateo's position with respect to the Dumbarton bridge is most fortunate. She is to be handed virtually an outright gift of $1,400,000 from San Francisco toward the bridge and will be called upon to raise only $700,000 by a bond issue as her share of construction expense. And since San Mateo is to have control of the bridge and to receive the toll fees, she can retire the bonds from that source of income. If only time have a steady source of profit.

That the bridge will be heavily patronized is assured in advance. And the benefits of the bridge from the standpoint of development of the peninsula territory in addition to the conveniences it will afford to the motoring public are inestimable.

In the Dumbarton bridge San Mateo has within her grasp an enviable prize—an asset beyond calculation. All that is necessary is for San Mateo to vote to accept the prize which the bond election is called—Palo Alto Times.

AN ENDORSEMENT

At a general meeting of the Redwood City Chamber of Commerce held January 13 the following resolution was unanimously carried:

"Resolved, that the Dumbarton bridge project be heartily endorsed by the chamber of commerce and that we go on record expressing our enthusiastic co-operation with other bodies endeavoring to consummate the project."

DANIEL R. STAFFORD</

Duck Hunting Reminiscences

Story No. 39

It was with feelings of deep, sincere regret that I learned but a few days after the serious illness in New York of William McDonald, famous bass, formerly of the Boston Opera Company, and at one time a resident of this city. It is difficult for me to realize that big, stalwart Bill McDonald is not the same splendid specimen of manhood as I remember him years ago when he first made his home here in our midst and engaged in the business of horse-shoeing, at which he was an expert. As I write I can see him as though it was yesterday, standing at his anvil in the little red-fronted shop on the property now occupied by the Del Monte Hotel; see the sparks fly as his hammer fell and dexterously turned a shoe that would stand the inspection of the most critical eye, and hear his melodious bass voice echo out through the open door with a volume that would attract the passerby with its rich melody.

"Our Bill," we always called him, for Redwood City claimed him as its own, although he was not born here. Coming, if I remember rightly, from Livermore, he was for some time employed by the late Governor Stanford at his trotting horse farm on what is now the site of the Leland Stanford Junior University. There he was engaged in shoeing the standard broods that made the names of Stanford and Charles Marvin, trainer and driver, equally famous. Subsequently McDonald came to Menlo Park and was employed by the late Edward Taylor. From there he came to Redwood City and made his home at the old Grand Hotel, then being run by W. J. Plump and Frank Thurston, where he remained until, through the recommendation of Mr. Plump and E. Ted Thompson, the rich bass voice came into its own and Bill, at the solicitation of an advance agent of the famous opera company, bade us goodbye to enter upon a stage career which brought him renown in all the large cities of the United States.

If you have never heard that voice in song you have certainly missed something in music, the equal of which it would be difficult to find today. Often I place one of his records on the victrola and as I listen memories crowd thick and fast upon my mind over events that have long since passed with the years that have gone.

While here Mr. McDonald married Ellen Lloyd, daughter of John Lloyd, one of the pioneers of Searsville, and the result of that union was two beautiful children, both boys, one of whom, I believe, passed away in the city of Chicago.

From the first time I met Bill McDonald I admired him, not only for the grand voice with which nature had endowed him, but for his prepossessing, straightforward, manly appearance. When he stood before you there was none of that cold, slippery handshake of the hypocrite in his grasp. You realized at once that someone had hold of you and that his greeting came straight from the heart. A warm friendship sprang up between us and we were often in each other's company on festive occasions. In fact we were both at about that age which comes to all young men sooner or later, when imagination assists one in arriving at the conclusion that you are a lady killer, and both Bill and myself were afflicted with that delusion.

On one night during the winter months we had escorted two of Redwood's belles home from the old Underhill roller skating rink, one of the chief places of amusement of those days, and were on our way down toward the center of town with the firm determination, at least upon my part, to go to bed. It was between 11 and 12, the streets were practically deserted, with the lone exception of the solitary night watchman, who rounded Hadler's corner with a big bullseye lantern to let everybody know he was on the job, just as we stepped in front of the Grand Hotel.

We stood chatting for a few moments when Bill suddenly exclaimed: "Say, kid, when are you going to take me on that duck hunt you promised me?"

"Any time you want to go when the moon is right," I replied. "Oh, the devil with the moon!" he came back at me. "We'll get some anyway. I told the boys at the hotel you were going to take me out and I would give them all a duck feed. Let's go tonight."

"Rash promise, Bill," I said. "We won't stand a ghost of a show to-night. The moon is on the last quarter and does not rise until nearly 1 o'clock."

"But I want the ducks for Sunday," he insisted, "and I know you can get them."

It is said that confidence was half the battles in any undertaking. Bill McDonald's was to me certainly amusing. Duck hunting is not all luck by any means. It is a study like everything else: the weather, tides, wind and at that time the moon had to be considered in order to make a successful shoot. I had been hunting for several years almost continuously and I felt that I was justified in the belief that I knew something about the webfoots. There never was any objection upon my part to taking a friend out for a shoot, for I like company, but there was one thing I did dislike, and that was to take someone out and come home empty-handed. The success I had in my duck hunting was in no way phenomenal. It was the result of close application and study concerning the habits of the birds and weather conditions. I felt that to go out that night was the height of folly. None of us boys thought of hunting on the last quarter of the moon and I did not wish to make a duke out of a hunt "with such a man as Bill McDonald."

"Still trying to dissuade him, I said, 'Bill, you know I have only got one gun, and but a single pair of gun boots.'"

"Don't worry about that," he hastily answered. "I will take you by Jones, get his gun, boots, shells and coat and be ready in a jiffy."

There was no way out of it. When Bill made up his mind to do anything it had to be done. How it was to be accomplished was a secondary consideration.

"All right, Bill, if you insist, I'll have to go. But if we fail to get any ducks don't blame me."

At that time I owned a little black mare, a gift from my grandfather, John Donald. She was by Whipple's Hambletonian, of San Mateo, and could step out on the road and do a mile in 3:15 without turning a hair.

What was going on in those days. Hurrying home, I went to my mother's room to let her know I was going away on another duck hunt and would not be back until after daylight. Then jumping into my hunting clothes, I went down to the barn, rolled out the cart and prepared for a trip that for once in my life I did not care to take. The little mare whinnied as I drew the warm blanket off her, and patting her on the neck as I buckled on the bridle she thought struck me what a shame it was to take her out that night on what I considered a wild goose chase. Sympathy was not wanted at that time, however, and when I pulled up at the Grand Hotel corner Bill was ready, gun, gun boots and all.

"Bill Jones was pretty generous with his shells," I ventured to say, noticing that all the pockets in my partner's hunting coat were bulging.

"You bet he was," came the reply, "and there is no danger of either of us catching pneumonia. Now for the ducks."

Such confidence! Would it result in anything? I did not think so. The night watchman gave us a parting salute with his flashlight and a few minutes later we were spinning along at a good clip down Middlefield road.

"Where are you going?" asked Bill.

"Cooley's is our only hope," I replied, "and I don't think there will be many feathers in the bottom of the cart when we get through."

On past the Sweeney ranch we sped and just as we reached the rear entrance to the Flood property the moon rose and cast its pale, sickly light through the branches of the live oak trees. Bill was doing most of the talking and while I listened my thinking cap was more than busy. Why had we come? Why had I been so foolish? The homes of the Nash, Kavanaughs and Crowes families, with their sleeping occupants, were passed in succession and we were soon at our destination. The Cooley family and my folks were warm personal friends and I was always a welcome guest. There was no need to awaken anyone; the barn door stood halloping and passing in through the driveway we soon unhitched the mare and had her tucked away in a nice warm stall and boded down for the balance of the night. Taking the cattle trail meandering through the field we headed for the levee and puddle where I had spent such a delightful evening with Henry Horton and some time before. It was cold and clear and the light from the halfmoon looked anything but promising to me. I did not even take the precaution to load my gun as we approached the small pond of water encircled with green grass. When 40 yards distant there came a roar and a conglomeration of futtering of wings as a cloud of wildgeese arose, startled at our approach.

"I told you so! I told you so!" exclaimed Bill as he danced around through the stubble like a 14-year-old boy. As for myself, I stood speechless with surprise until it suddenly dawned upon me that I had learned something that night. From thenceforth I continued to acquire more knowledge concerning the birds of the marshland, and I must confess that after an experience of 40 years I never go out for a short hunt but

SUPERVISORS IN REGULAR SESSION

The board of supervisors held a regular session Monday. The first matter taken up was the hearing of the charges presented by George D. Squires to the effect that Miss Florence Boggs had made an adverse report to the state board of charities and corrections, charging maltreatment and starvation of children in charge of Mr. and Mrs. Squires. Mr. Squires was present and wanted to interrogate Miss Boggs, but the district attorney ruled against this. Mrs. Grace Francis, mother of one of the boys, was placed on the stand, but the district attorney objected to her statements on the ground that they were hearsay. Squires then withdrew his charges, saying he would take the matter up in another way. The board then passed a motion exonerating Miss Boggs on the ground that no evidence had been placed before the board substantiating the charges made by Squires.

The board entered on the hearing of the proposition to vacate parts of Auburn, Eucalyptus and Elm avenues south of Morrison avenue in the subdivision of Laurel Creek farm. James Mulryan said the streets led only to cow pastures. H. A. Powell, owner of the tract south of the Laurel creek farm, stated it was necessary to have the streets open so he could get to and from his place. A further hearing will be held February 6.

J. J. McGrath and D. C. Imboden asked the supervisors to send a representative to a hearing in San Francisco on January 30, when the railroad commission will take up the request to put in a drawbridge at Seventh and Channel streets. Supervisor Hickey was instructed to attend the meeting and protest against allowing the installation of the proposed bridge.

It was decided to consider measures for enforcing liquor law violations at San Mateo in executive session. Mrs. John L. McGinn asked the board to take action.

Requests are to be made of E. O. Heinrich, Carl Elenschmel and Ernest A. Vectors to reduce their bills for services in the Hightower case, as the charges are considered excessive.

A request was received from E. L. Cope for tunnel or bridge plans for the Commonwealth Club, but as none are in possession of the supervisors the request could not be complied with.

A claim of $5.85 for telephone service at the office of Porter E. Lamb as justice of the peace at Burlingame was rejected by the board and the instrument ordered removed.

KOHL ESTATE AFFAIRS
Judge Hinder on Thursday settled the final account of Frank G. Drum and Alan W. Magnus as special administrators of the Kohl estate and ordered their discharge. The court also settled their accounts as executors to date and accepted the resignation of Frank G. Drum as executor. The Mercantile Trust Company, whom the will appoints as substitute executor if there be any resignation, filed its petition for letters testamentary, which will be heard February 2. Sloss, Ackerman and Bradley are attorneys for Magnus and L. F. Young for Drum and the Mercantile Trust Company.

According to the reports of the executors the receipts of the estate from January 4 were $24,105.17 and the disbursements $3,977.87. Attorney Michael, representing the executors, was allowed $1,000. He only acted as attorney during the special administration of the estate.

BOWIE ESTATE APPRAISED
H. C. Tuchen, inheritance tax appraiser of the estate of Henry P. Bowie, deceased, has filed his inventory and appraisal. The total value of the estate is placed at $206,211.52. It consists of real property at San Mateo, stocks, bonds and personal effects. The estate is somewhat encumbered.

NEW HOME BUILDING CORPORATION FORMED
The Home Building Corporation of San Bruno has filed articles of incorporation in the office of the county clerk. It has a capitalization of $50,000, of which $300 has been taken. Incorporators are D. A. Smith, Prosper Peron, Peter Gouze, J. Picot of San Bruno, S. B. Hatch and F. S. Lockwood, San Mateo.

MENLO PARK NEWS

The Bear Gulch Water Company on Tuesday was granted authority by the state railroad commission to issue and sell $45,000 of first mortgage 5 per cent bonds at not less than 87.9 per cent of face value. The order provides that the proceeds are to be used to pay two $10,000 notes and reimburse the company's treasury for extensions, additions and betterments.

Miss Minnie Finn, a professional nurse of San Francisco, has bought the Harry Mahoney property on MacBain avenue, on which she will build a residence early in spring. Miss Finn intends to reside there.

Martin Buckbee, father of Mrs. Harry Weeden, is very low and may not live. On New Year's day he suffered a paralytic stroke. Mr. Buckbee is well advanced in years, is infirm and feeble and it is hardly probable that he will survive his present illness.

The Southern Pacific Bulletin published monthly, contains the names of a number of station agents who have rendered correct reports during the past year. They are given honorable mention in this bulletin, which appeared during the week. Among the number is Joseph Voverka, the agent at Menlo Park.

Mrs. Sophie Rosenblum, a wealthy lady of San Francisco, has purchased the beautiful home of E. W. Hopkins on Oak Grove avenue, consisting of 16 1/2 acres and fine improvements. According to the federal stamps on the deed filed in the office of County Recorder T. C. Rice the sum of $30,000 was paid for the property. This is certainly a small figure for such choice realty. It is easily worth double that amount. However, the stamps speak for themselves. Mr. Hopkins has owned the home for over 30 years, but has not occupied it for the past two years and was anxious to dispose of it.

The local grammar school is filling up so rapidly with pupils that the trustees are contemplating adding two new class rooms to the building. There are now 150 children in attendance, requiring a corps of four teachers. Another teacher will be added next term. St. Joseph's parochial school is also crowded to capacity. This is an evidence of the growth of this community.

P. E. McCourt, superintendent of the Standard Oil Company at Redwood City, has leased the Sheridan place to the rear of the home of John O'Farrell at Atherton.

A. Loga, the fireman who was killed while on his way to a conflagration in the city on Monday, was well known here, having been a sergeant at the fire department at Camp Fremont. He spent 15 months here and it was during his stay that he took the examination for a place in the San Francisco department and passed with flying colors. After the war he went to San Francisco and was appointed a truck man in the department.

All the fight fans will have an opportunity to see the Dempsey-Carpenter fight on the screen in Menlo Park Theatre on Tuesday evening next.

P. J. Maloney, a Menlo Park pioneer, is in a critical condition at his home on Santa Cruz avenue. His relatives are gathered about his bedside and are prepared for the worst. He has been in a comatose condition for several days. Mr. Maloney came to Menlo Park in 1867. He was assessor of San Mateo county in the early eighties. Owing to his age and infirmities it will be difficult for him to pull through his present illness. J. R. Banta motored overland with his family from New York and stopped here Tuesday to see his comrade, Philip Blanchard. Banta is on his way to his apple orchard in the Yakima valley, Washington, which he bought after the war. During the world conflict Banta was a major and was in charge of the Liberty theater of the eastern coast. At Camp Merritt, N. J., he met Blanchard and they became fast friends. The latter worked with the major for some time, having been appointed in that detail.

Mrs. Marie Louise de Guigne, formerly Miss Elkins, was married in New York last Saturday to Paul Thayer Laccaci of that city. Mrs. de Guigne was granted a final decree of divorce from De Guigne the day before by Judge Hudson of Redwood City. The bride is a granddaughter of the late Senator C. N. Felton and often visited her grandfather here. Her paternal grandfather at his death many years ago left her $2,000,000. Mrs. Laccaci has the custody of her 9-year-old boy, Charles J. C. de Guigne III, but he must not be taken out of the state without the permission of the superior court of this county. The father is to have general supervision of the boy's education.

At a large meeting of the Young Ladies' Institute held at San Mateo on Thursday evening the announcement of engagement of Miss Alda Gale and David Moore, peninsula correspondent of the San Francisco Chronicle was made. The wedding is to be a spring event. Miss Gale is a professional nurse at Mills Memorial Hospital at San Mateo. She is the pretty daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Gale of Menlo Park. Mr. Moore was an aviator in the United States army during the war, serving three years as a lieutenant. After the armistice he came to California. He is a Texan, but now that he is to marry a California girl he is to make the Golden State his permanent residence. He is a genial gentleman, worthy of the young lady who is to be his life partner. Miss Gale's sister, Marguerite, was united in marriage to Mr. Doughty the first of the year.

LOOK FORWARD

The year 1921 has gone—1922 is here. You are living in a fine country. You are living in the best time in the history of the world. This year will be what you want to make it. If you are looking for trouble you'll find the world has a chip on its shoulder. If you are looking for pleasure you will find that Dame Nature shakes a wicked foot. If it is work that you are looking for you can find the handle of an ax in every wood pile. If it's happiness you are after you'll see tears running down the cheeks of old Jupiter Pluvius—he's laughing so loud and happily. You can make 1922 just what you want to make it. If you are a bum you'll travel with bums. If you are a worker you'll travel with workers and be cheerful and happy.

We wish you a good year in 1922 and for ourselves we will say with Robert Browning:

"The year is closed, the record made; The last deed done, the last word said. The memory alone remains Of all its joys, its grief, its gains; And now with purpose full and clear I turn to meet another year."
